A. J. C. Leaders, Through Lehman, Get Mikoyan Denial Of Plan To Send Jews To Siberia

Anastas I. Mikoyan, First Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union, told a group of the American Jewish Committee in New York that reports of an intended large-scale movement of Russian Jews to Birobidzhan in Siberia were untrue.

This was made known by former Senator Herbert H. Lehman after he and the other Jewish leaders had held a luncheon-conference with Mr. Mikoyan and Soviet Ambassador Mikhail A. Menshikov, says the New York Times. Their meeting in the Carlyle Hotel lasted one hour and forty-five minutes.

Mr. Lehman later told reporters that he was authorized to issue the following statement on behalf of Mr. Mikoyan: "The reported plans for the re-creation of a Jewish state in Birobidzhan and the transfer of the Jewish population in Russia to that area are without foundation."

Mr. Lehman said that he was "gratified" with the statement. But Irving M. Engel, the agency's president, remarked: "We are gratified but the answer does not necessarily satisfy us; there is a difference between being satisfied and gratified."

Jacob Blaustein, honorary president, described the session as "amiable but serious." Without giving details, Mr. Lehman reported that in addition to the Birobidzhan issue other Jewish problems in the Soviet Union were discussed.

This was the first meeting in the United States of ranking Soviet officials with a Jewish group for dealing with these problems, says the New York Times. American Jewish organizations have frequently charged suppression of Jewish communal, cultural and religious life in the Soviet Union.

The American Jewish Committee, the fifty-two-year-old human relations agency, had learned from its Paris office, that a large-scale movement of Soviet Jews to Birobidzhan might be proposed to the Soviet Communist party's congress' opening January 27 in Moscow. Mr. Lehman arranged for the meeting with the Soviet officials.

Earlier in the luncheon meeting, the Jewish leaders presented a statement to Mr. Mikoyan noting that "the reports of a possible movement of Soviet Jews to Birobidzhan have not been refuted by any responsible Soviet source." It added:

"Today Jews constitute only one-fifth of the population of this so-called 'autonomous Jewish region' in which almost all expressions of Jewish cultural life such as schools, theatres and publishing houses, have been suppressed.

"The renewal of the scheme would, therefore, be completely devoid of any incentive for Jews to accept voluntarily the enormous sacrifices and burdens involved."

Birobidzhan was established by the Soviet Union in 1928, primarily as a Soviet alternative to Palestine for Jews wishing a Jewish homeland. The number of Jews who moved there was never more than a fraction of the 3,000,000 Jews in the Soviet Union, says the New York Times. The American Jewish Committee estimates the present population of Birobidzhan at 150,000, with only about 35,000 Jews.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Israeli Envoy Is Hopeful About Future Of Jews In S.A.

Optimism regarding the future of the Jewish communities in Argentina and other South American countries was voiced by Dr. A. L. Kubovy, former Ambassador of Israel to Argentina, Chile, and Paraguay, at a World Jewish Congress luncheon in New York. Dr. and Mrs. Kubovy, who were on their way back to Israel, were welcomed by Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, and Dr. Israel Goldstein, chairman of the Western Hemisphere executive, who presided. Consul General of Israel Simcha Pratt and Ambassador Moshe Tov attended and members of the WJC executive. There is no Jewish aspect involved in the serious crisis of growth through which most South American countries are passing at present and there is therefore no special danger to be feared for the Jews. Isolated anti-Semitic incidents should not be magnified, although they should be faced, Dr. Kubovy said. On the whole he had met warm and friendly feelings for Jews and for Israel. Leading Argentinian personalities had even publicly expressed a sense of guilt that they had not been able to help the Jewish people when persecuted by Hitler.

Dr. Kubovy explained the lack of stability in South America by the three-fold revolution, political, social and economic, which is taking place in countries afflicted by a one-side economy. He was confident that if the United States would give to South American democracies adequate and generous support, the present turmoil would result in a brighter future for the entire region and for its Jewish communities. Should, however, the U. S. support be too little or too late, there might be a possibility of violence or mob rule in one or two areas, and of rapidly expanding Communist influence.

Describing the pulsating Jewish life existing in Argentina, Dr. Kubovy said that a growing democratic process operates throughout the community. It was a stronghold of Yiddish but was also becoming a pillar of Hebrew, numbering up to ten thousand Hebraists. There was a close bond between the Jews of Argentina and Israel, expressing itself in a steady flow of pioneering and middle-class immigration and in the growing number of South American settlements in Israel. It had been displayed during the visit of a Knesset delegation and during the installation of President Frondizi when the Israel representatives, traveling in a motorcade on that occasion, had drawn an excited ovation from the crowd.

"There is no doubt that the Sinai victory aroused great respect for Israel and for Jews," the Ambassador commented. Stating that he saw "no objective reason" for disquiet concerning the future of Jews in Latin America, Dr. Kubovy thought that the present friendship for Israel would continue to be demonstrated on an ever-growing scale. Dr. Goldmann and Dr. Goldstein referred to Dr. Kubovy's earlier role as the Secretary-General of the World Jewish Congress and expressed the hope that the Congress would have the benefit of his advice and support once he is settled in Israel.

Welcoming the WJC decision to establish a Latin American Council, Dr. Kubovy hoped that it would be given the means and the task of helping to co-ordinate the legal, cultural, social, religious and other problems facing the various Latin American communities each of which seeks to solve them alone. Such action by the WJC would be vital and of great and lasting value to all the communities of Latin America, he said.

Rabbi G. Friedlander, secretary of the Central Jewish Committee, of Bolivia, reported that his 3,000-member community's day school, the Jewish College of Bolivia, was

Predicts Huge Growth Of Orthodoxy In Ten Years

An accelerated expansion of all phases of Orthodox Judaism in the next ten years, including the development of 1,000 new congregations and the doubling of Jewish day schools in America was forecast by Moses I. Feuerstein, of Brookline, Mass., president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, before 1,000 delegates attending the union's sixtieth anniversary national biennial convention at Atlantic City, N. J.

The Union's head also forecast the establishment of a world union of Orthodox Jewish congregations, says the New York Times. He said that the 1,000 new synagogues in the United States would be developed primarily in suburban areas "to meet the needs of the constantly growing Jewish Orthodox population." He added that these religious institutions "will have the Jewish form of prayer, providing separate seating for men and women."

The anticipated growth in the number of Jewish day schools from the present 260 to more than 500 will include a substantial increase in the number of Jewish high schools, he said. He added that this growth "will be particularly notable on the West Coast." He foresaw a corresponding rise in the budget of the American Jewish community for the day-school movement from its present level of about $10,000,000 annually to about $25,000,000.

Mr. Feuerstein emphasized that the Beth Din, the Jewish religious court of law, would become "an increasingly important factor in Orthodox Jewish life in our country." However, he tempered his optimistic forecasts by expressing concern over a "drifting of some American Jews away from the teachings of our faith."

Asserting that there was "a trend toward secular nationalism in Israel," he said that "continuation of this trend can create an increasing estrangement, and even alienation, among the Jewish communities throughout the world."

Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, spoke on the growth of Orthodox Judaism. Dr. William W. Brickman, Professor of Education at New York University, said that special Orthodox groups would be required on the campuses of American colleges and universities to meet the religious needs of the Orthodox students, says the New York Times. The Union presented scrolls to Albert B. Joffee, of Cedarhurst, N. Y., philanthropist and Orthodox lay leader, for "many years of services to traditional Judaism," and to Rabbi Solomon H. Sharfman, of Brooklyn, past president of the Rabbinical Council, "for distinguished service in the field traditional rabbinic leadership."

The head of Bnai Brith predicted a deepening religiosity in American Jewish life in the next ten years because of the accelerated progress in Jewish religious education. At the same time, Philip M. Klutznick, president of the 115-year-old Jewish service group, challenged "spokesmen of gloom who say Jewish life is traveling downhill toward complete secularism."

He spoke to delegates at the sixtieth anniversary national biennial convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America. The Union represents 2,500 Orthodox synagogues in the U. S. and Canada.

After citing "a steady development of a brand of cultural Judaism fitted to and growing out of the free spirit of the voluntary American society," Mr. Klutznick warned the American Jewish community against "splintering itself" through "sectarian differences among its Reform, Orthodox, and Conservative groups."

He called on Jewish religious leaders "in the struggle to combat religious illiteracy to seek out formulas that can achieve mutual respect without any one group surrendering its denominational distinction."

Orthodox Judaism regards its religious law as eternal and binding. Conservative Judaism agrees to the principle but seeks to adapt Jewish law to changing conditions. The Reform branch views Judaism as an evolving faith responsive to the varying conditions in which Jews live.

Criticizing "those who seek a vicarious fulfillment of their Jewishness through a reborn Jewish state (Israel) 6,000 miles away," Mr. Klutznick added: "For American Jews to express their Jewishness solely in terms of Israel's needs is a disservice to Israel and to Jewish survival."

Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union, presented a citation to Mr. Klutznick and the Bnai Brith "for major contributions to the welfare of Jewry, to the defense of Jewish rights in the service of humanity and in the upholding of Jewish dignity."

Dr. Leo Jung, president of the Jewish Academy of Arts and Sciences, told the delegates that "a sober estimate" of the sixty years of the Union indicated that "a renaissance of Torah - true Judaism is in the making in the United States."

Reuben E. Gross, the Union's national secretary, presented the Union's Armed Forces Award the Rear Admiral Morris Smellow, retired, of Annapolis, Md., for "distinguished service to the maintenance of Jewish traditions among Jewish naval personnel."

$50 Million Paid In Jewish Claims Against Germany Will Aid Humans And Communal Life

The Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany said in London, England, that it had distributed more than $50,000,000 in reparations money received from West Germany among needy Jewish victims of Nazism in thirty-four countries. Dr. Nahum Goldmann presided.

The money was received and disbursed in the last five years, the Conference said, under an agreement providing that West Germans would pay $123,000,000 within twelve years for the benefit of surviving Nazi victims outside Israel, reports the New York Times. The statement on expenditures was reported at a special meeting of the directors called to hear the results of a study of the Claims Conference's operations by a committee appointed early this year.

The report, presented by Jacob Blaustein, of Baltimore, Maryland, senior vice president, said Conference funds had become a major force "in the rehabilitation of human lives and of Jewish communal and spiritual life which suffered at Nazi hands." It also said the Conference was "making a significant contribution in developing a wide-ranging program for cultural and educational reconstruction on a global basis."

Citing the Conference's achievements, the report said it had provided welfare services to more than 125,000 needy Nazi victims yearly. It also had provided legal aid to 115,000 Nazi victims to help them obtain what was due to them under individual indemnification legislation. Recoveries on their behalf have reached $150,000,000, the report said.

It added that funds also had been used to establish or expand a wide variety of Jewish institutions and to finance programs of cultural and educational reconstruction, says the New York Times. The Committee concluded that the principles governing the allocation of Conference funds were sound and should be retained.

Jewish communities in countries that fell under Nazi occupation or those disproportionately burdened by heavy influxes of Nazi victims should remain the areas of primary concern, it asserted.

N.Y. House For Largest Hillel Group In World Cost $650,000

The new $650,000 Abe Stark House the Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation at Hillel Place and Campus Road, across the street from Brooklyn College, in New York, was dedicated recently. The Hillel Foundation, which has branches on 238 campuses in the United States, Canada and other countries, ministers to the religious, cultural and social needs of Jewish students.

Until the dedication of Abe Stark House, named in honor of the president of the New York City Council, the Brooklyn College branch of Hillel was housed in a rented loft above a grocery store and delicatessen at Flatbush and Hostrand Avenues.

The new three-story building of steel and glass with red brick and white trimming is designed to harmonize with the existing color scheme of the campus, says the New York Herald Tribune.

The fifteen-room structure contains an auditorium and stage as well as a chapel, game rooms, club and meeting rooms and provides services for the 18,000 Jewish students attending Brooklyn College. The Brooklyn College chapter is the largest Hillel group in the world.

Gov. Herriman emphasized that in the present uncertain times when the future of western civilization is challenged, "one of the great problems before us is the vital need to broaden educational opportunities for our young people." He asserted "we must see to it that no boy or girl, with the capability and the willingness to work, is denied the opportunity for the fullest educational development within his or her capacity."

Mayor Wagner accepted the building on behalf of the city of New York as "an added contribution to a great campus in a great city with its tradition of better understanding among its people." Philip M. Klutznick, president of Bnai Brith, in making the presentation, emphasized the need for formal religion if Judaism is to survive. Dr. A. Sachar, president of Brandeis University, took part.

THE DANCER

BY DAVID FRISHMAN

Now my mother received these things from her mother, and her mother from her mother, and her grandmother from her grandmother, generation after generation, and my mother made them known to me.

When the children of Israel went forth out of Egypt, among those that went forth was one of the mixed multitude, goodly of statute and fair to look upon and his name was Put. And all the women and all the maidens from one end of the border to the other end of the border, did look after him all day, and at night when they lay on their couch, they saw him in their dreams. In those days a maiden of the sons of Gershom, of the family of the half-tribe of Menashe saw him, and her name was Timnah. And in that moment her face grew red and thereafter very white, for she loved him.

And in those wondrous days the heavens were new and blue, a thousandfold more so than this day, and the earth was green and fresh a thousandfold more so than this day, and love, too, was stronger and mightier a thousandfold more so than this day. After the lad cleaved to the maiden and he journeyed after her tent, journeying ever onwards. When she took her journey from Rameses to Succoth he journeyed silently after her, and when she took her journey from Succoth to Etham he journeyed, even here, silently after her. And when she took her journey from Etham unto Pi-hachiroth, which is before Baal Zafon he journeyed after her also. Like a shadow that is on the wall journeyed he after her.

At Pi-hachiroth he came up to her at once in the morning when the sun shone exceedingly. And he gave her a ring of beaten gold and he put it on her finger. Then the rays of the sun came down on the ring, and the ring was bathed in the abundance of light and it shone, and for an instant it lit up all that was roundabout. And at that moment the youth bent his head over her and kissed her, a long, great kiss, and she kissed him — and the great, black eyes of the maiden were twice as large as they had been.

And from Pi-hachirot they took their journey together unto Migdal and to Marah and to Eilim and to the Red Sea and to the Wilderness of Sin. By day the sun shone for them until they were faint — but they knew it not, and at night they lay in the gateway, by the opening of the tent, on the threshold, his left hand under her crown and his right upon her heart, and they spoke neither a word. In the Wilderness of Sin, of a sudden, the lad disappeared, and he was not seen again from one end of the border unto the other, and there were many who said that his soul was weary of her of a sudden and he had returned to Egypt.

But the maiden believed it not. In the morning she arose and she looked at the ring and her large, black eyes were twice as large. At noon, she took the ring and looked long at it, and at night she laid it under her pillow and she dreamed and in her dream she saw the ring. Whosoever possessed the ring need have no fear, neither must his heart be heavy upon him, and he that gave such a ring would never lie. Something had befallen him. It has but a chance, in a little while he would return. But the youth did not return. And when they came to Dofkah, all the women and the maidens in the camp looked after her and they whispered secretly and their eyes were full of mockery and of poison. But the maiden laid it not to heart. For he had given her the ring and it would not lie. The ring became for her the content of life.

And when they came unto Alush, even then the youth did not return. In the course of a single night a long furrow blossomed along her brow, dividing it lengthwise, and a mist covered her large eyes. Out of the earth, of a sudden, arose a silent, dull, heavy sadness and rested upon her. The women who saw her, ceased to mock at her, but spoke to her softly, and as they spoke the tears appeared. But the maiden did naught but look from time to time at the ring which was upon her finger, and at times she laughed and at times she wept and at times her eyes brightened and at times she shut the door behind her and hid, so that no man see her face, and at times she hoped again.

And when they came to Rephidim the days were tedious and the nights were exceeding tedious, and she but waited, waited. On the morning of one day, she rose and took the mirror made of polished copper and looked at her face, and behold in it she saw that at her temple there had grown one white hair — and she plucked the hair with her fingers. And the women and the maidens did befriend her, and they spoke to her that she be of good heart, to strengthen her. But she scarce did hear. Only the ring she held tightly with all her strength and pressed her finger upon it, and sometimes she believed that she herself was the ring, and at times she believed that it was not the ring but the youth, and she embraced him with her hands. And there were times when her thoughts were confused that she knew not if the ring had left her and Put was still before her, or if Put had left her and the ring was still on her finger.

Thus they came to the Wilderness of Sin. And the maiden pressed the ring to her finger, more and more, day by day. For the ring was as the breath of her life, upon which her soul depended, and all that was within her soul. All her dreams and her desires were bound up with that ring, and the ring was for her a peculiar treasure and a talisman and an eternal light, which lit up her darkness. All that had come to pass and all that would yet befall her, all she poured forth into the ring. While yet this ring was with her, all was yet with her, and she could hope, and despite all the evil that had befallen her, she desired to hope.

And in those days in the Wilderness of Sin there were wrought great, marvellous things, which turned aside the hearts of the people from their daily affairs, and which took their hearts entirely. God was given unto the people. Night and day, for three days, all Mount Sinai gave forth smoke, and bounds were set about the people in their houses and they sanctified themselves and they purified themselves and they washed their clothes.

And the sound of the trumpet was exceeding loud and the thunder and the firebrands and the lightning were exceeding great for three days, night and day, and there was a great feast, the like of which had never been before. God was given unto the people. In those great and fearful days, all the people about did think of God, but Him they did not see, only did they hear His voice and see the acts He had wrought, and the lesser deeds that are done every day, these no man considered nor did they remember them any more.

And who would think, in these days, of a poor maiden who sat in the concealment of her tent, with her affliction and the distress in her heart?

And at the end of a number of days there were other tidings. The people were weary of waiting for God in the cloud, whom they saw not, and of a sudden they wished for a god that had an image. And they gathered unto the High Priest and they cried out: Arise, make us a god! And the priest silenced them for a while and said: On the morrow I will do it. Let every man offer up a piece of gold as a crown or a ring or aught that he hath, and of the gold I will make a god.

And on the morrow the day burned like a furnace. From the gate of the tent of the High Priest, a great new wagon went forth yoked to two bullocks. And the horns of the wagon were covered with gold and it gave forth brightness and glory, whithersoever it turned. And the horns of the bullocks that were yoked to the wagon, they, too, were covered with shining gold, and ribbons of purple thread with blue flowers were bound to their horns, and upon the backs of the bullocks were coats of blue, goodly to look upon, and by both sides of the wagon, from this side and from that, two priests walked, each on his side, clad in shirts of linen, with the outer cloak and the breastplate, and in their hands the trumpets, and the pomegranates of blue which were in their garments tinkled as they walked.

And the bullocks that were yoked to the wagon walked slowly, drawing the wagon, and as the wagon moved, the priests sounded

When joy reigns, reasonably confined, cocktails are probably in the offing. Or on trays. Or in eager hands.

Some of the merriest cocktails, you will find on close investigation, have been made with Bright's Sweet Vermouth (Manhattans) or Bright's Dry Vermouth (Martinis and Gibsons). There's no need to get involved in long speculation. The answer is crystal-clear. Bright's Vermouths are carefully blended and carefully aged wines made with 12 rare and expensive herbs imported from four continents.

A pamphlet describing how Bright's Vermouths are made, including names of the herbs noted, is available on request from Bright's at Lachine, Que. But if you're the impatient sort, try some of Bright's fine Vermouth soon, shortly, or better still—immediately.

Labor Body Asks Dulles To Help Political Prisoners In Spain

U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles was asked by the Jewish Labor Committee in New York to "use your good offices to gain Christmas amnesty for political prisoners in Spain who have dared to voice legitimate opposition to the Franco regime." In a wire signed by Adolph Held, national chairman of the organization representing 500,000 Jewish workers in the AFL-CIO and more than 70,000 families in the Workmen's Circle in the U.S., Mr. Held said that the JLC was joining "with millions of free trade unionists protesting continued repression of political thought in Spain. Incarceration of pro-democratic, anti-Communist trade unionists weakens the NATO fabric."

Eduardo Villegas Vega, former president of the General Union of Workers (UGT) and Enrigue Marco Nadal of the CNT were confined to solitary confinement recently after they had written to Generalissimo Franco that their original imprisonment in 1940 and 1949, respectively, negated a statement given early this past summer by General Franco to a French newspaperman that no one had been persecuted for his political beliefs since the end of the Spanish Civil War in 1939.

The General was quoted as stating that only persons guilty of "criminal offenses" were incarcerated in Spanish prisons. The two men writing in their own behalf and on behalf of 30% of those now being held in prisons in Spain for political opposition and free trade unionism said that they were being imprisoned as "common felons, rather than for working against what you, Franco, stand for politically."

Richly iced cake and soft drinks are usually favorite fare at children's parties but nourishing sandwiches and fruits are much better. Sweets made from dried fruit and nuts with plenty of fruit juices and milk, perhaps flavored and tinted for party glamor, are more nutritious than too many candies and pastries.

New Annual Event Is Jewish Teacher's Day

Teacher's Day, a new annual event in Jewish community life, was proclaimed by the American Association for Jewish Education in a special resolution adopted by its board of governors and is to take place during the week of Lag B'Omer, historically designated as "the scholar's holiday", which will fall on May 26, between Mother's Day and Father's Day. The resolution, calls upon schools, congregations, and other educational agencies to give public recognition to the Jewish teacher and educator. Philip W. Lown, president of the American Association, said that program materials are already in preparation and will be mailed shortly to rabbis, educational administrators, and lay heads of national and local educational institutions.

The resolution was introduced by Jacob Alkow, New York lay leader, on behalf of the Association's committee on teacher education and welfare which was organized in 1957 in response to the critical shortage of teachers for Jewish schools. The committee has since undertaken a number of projects to elevate the economic and social status of the Jewish educator, to attract young people to the field, and improve the training of the Hebrew teacher. It is working out a national pension plan for Jewish teachers and a national code of personnel practice. The consultant to the committee is Rabbi Hyman Chanover. The executive director of the American Association is Dr. Judah Pilch.

their trumpets, and when the trumpets sounded and every man in his tent heard the blast, he went forth to the opening of his tent, and his wife and his sons and his daughters and all that he had went forth after him. And the wagon passed through the camp from end to end, by the door of every tent, and the men and women went forth and cast, every man and every woman, their bundle of gold into the wagon to make of it a god.

There was no man in all the border whose heart did not make him willing to give his offering. The men gave their ornaments and their chains of gold and all that was of gold, and the women divested themselves of their nose-rings and their rings and their crescents and their hair-ornaments and they cast them into the wagon. Both rich and poor did give, for they sought that every man have a share in the god.

A spirit of drunkenness clothed the entire congregation that was round about, to give. On the threshold of their tents and upon the battlements of the roofs and in the windows the men stood, together with the women, and they awaited the coming of the wagon and they would cast even lamps of gold, and also censers and bowls of gold, even beakers and staffs of gold did they throw.

And a rich woman came up and she took the golden flute with which the sick child that lay between her breasts did play and she cast it into the wagon. And the wagon was exceeding heavy with the gold, full even unto the brims, so that it could scarce move from the place, and the people did bring yet more and more and did not stop.

Thus came the wagon unto the doorway of the tent that was of Timnah. And Timnah stood in the doorway of her tent and her ring was upon her finger. Nay! All that she had she would give but not this ring! For in this ring was impressed all her life and all that she had and all that she had had, and perchance in it was impressed all that she would yet have. This ring she would not give! She would not give it! She would not give it! She would not give it!

And the wagon came nearer and nearer and from the roofs and from the battlements her neighbours were yet casting, every woman, all that she had. Behold, before her eyes, a nose-ring fell from the battlement at her side, and was buried in the much gold that was in the wagon! Behold a beaker of gold! Behold a great, golden bowl. A spirit of drunkenness passed over the camp, taking hold of every man and woman, passing from man to man. And then, the wagon came over against the doorway of the tent and the priests sounded the trumpets, and the bullocks lowed, and the pomegranates tinkled.

And Timnah stood before the wagon. And a sudden fear rested upon her and she knew it not. With the finger of her right hand she drew off the ring which was on the finger of her left hand, drawing and replacing, drawing and replacing, as one who is mad or plays. And before she knew what she did she had taken off the ring from her finger and in an instant it was in the midst of the great heap of gold which was in the wagon.

And at that moment she felt that something was rent within her heart and torn off, and of a sudden her heart was empty, and the wagon was no more and all people were no more and the sun was blotted out and there was darkness all around. And then the maiden knew that never again would her chosen one return and for her he had died for all eternity. And the wagon went on further and gathered in the remnant which the people brought and it came unto the border.

And on the morrow there was great rejoicing in the camp. The High Priest took all the gold which the wagon had brought and he cast it into the fire and he took the mould that had come forth from the fire and he fashioned it with a graving-tool and with compasses and he made of it a Calf-God. Then, the people saw the god with their own eyes, face to face, and they uttered a great shout. And the priest builded an altar before him and he offered up the whole-offerings which they had brought and the rejoicing was very great. And the people sat down to eat and they drank exceeding much and they rose to play. Then the women and the maidens also went forth and they came and the men played on the flutes and beat the drums and the women held hands and they encompassed the calf round about and went forth in dances.

And then, of a sudden, they all started backwards and made room: Behold, a maiden was seen of a sudden among the dancers, who did dance wondrously that never before was there a dancer like unto her. Behold, she moved her feet and her head and shook her body above and below, backward and forwards, slowly and then quickly again, making every heart tremble at the sight of her. Was this not Timnah, the maiden of Gershom, of the half-tribe of Menashe?

Now she danced slowly, in peace and it was as if in the beginning of her hoping, when the flowers blossomed upon the earth and within her heart, and when she turned the crown of her head over against her, and her face and her eyes shone, it was the first kiss. And suddenly, she folded up and writhed like a snake — behold the first pang had come, the wind had blown the flowers and her heart, and there was cold and fear.

And in an instant she was mincing on her feet, mincing, mincing. She still had the ring! She still had the ring! She still had the ring! All her life and her soul, even her chosen one, were they engraven in this ring, yea, all together they were one ring. And then she bore herself heavily, heavily, heavily, and all the mem-

Memorandum Of Outrage

Presented to His Excellency Anastas Mikoyan, Deputy Premier, U.S.S.R., from the Jewish labor Committee, of New York

Your Excellency's refusal to meet with a group of prominent Jewish labor leaders to discuss the increasing tempo of anti-Semitic propaganda within and originating from the Soviet Union, and the continued anti-Jewish repressions within your country, should arouse the conscience of the world.

The purpose of our projected visit was to seek an accounting of the refusal of your government for the past ten years to reply to responsible and documented inquiries concerning the liquidation of Jewish cultural institutions and personalities within the U.S.S.R.

The Jewish Labor Committee, which represents half a million Jewish workers in the AFL-CIO and whose constituency includes the Workmen's Circle, the world's largest Jewish labor fraternal organization, has for over a decade catalogued documented evidence showing that Jews in the Soviet Union were the victims of a cultural pogrom endorsed by both Stalin and now Khrushchev.

As recently as December 23rd, 1958, the Soviet broadcasting facilities in Kirovograd ranted against Jews in language echoing the ghost of Joseph Goebbels. Similarly, the same radio station, on December 17th, 1958, echoed the old canards against Jews that incited the Russian people under the Tsars.

We consider the book, "The State of Israel: Its Position and Policy", by the Soviet authors, K. Ivanov and B. Sheynis, recently published in Moscow, a companion piece to the anti-Semitic forgery, "The Protocols of Zion", which was used by Tsarist secret police and by professional bigots to incite the masses of non-Jews against the Jews. What purpose does this volume serve other than to further perpetuate a policy of violent anti-Semitic assaults? Is it not designed to incite the Soviet populace against all Soviet Jews, identifying them as "tools of imperialism?" The graveyards of Russia and your satellites bear mute testimony to the fact that Jews have been the first to suffer at the hands of imperialistic and totalitarian powers.

We wanted to discuss with you a meeting held in October, 1956, in Warsaw, Poland, a meeting attended by Nikolai Maslenikov, of the Soviet Embassy in Warsaw, with leaders of the anti-Semitic Natolin group. The names of these leaders are: Zenon Nowak, Kazimierz Mijal, and General Kazimierz Wiaszeski. This meeting was called ostensibly to arrange for a tour of the U.S.S.R. by Polish journalists. Maslenikov, at another meeting of the Polish Journalists Union, launched into a long tirade against the Gomulka regime because of the latter's then somewhat relaxed attitudes toward Catholics. Maslenikov coupled his attacks on the regime with specific charges that Jews were in that government controlling the press, party administration, and the government apparatus.

When Jan Dziedzic, a member of the Journalists Union who attended the meeting, accused the speaker of Hitlerism, the vitriolic anti-Jewish attacks were intensified by citing that Jews have been found to be traitors in the republics of Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, and Kirgizia, and they were expelled. When Jerzy Mond, Secretary of the Polish Journalists Union, confronted Maslenikov with the fact that he, Mond, came from Jewish parentage, the latter exclaimed, "How can that be? Your father was a general in the Polish Army and the first commander in Vilna."

Do you accept or repudiate these sentiments? Was Maslenikov speaking for himself or for the Politburo?

The Jewish press, Yiddish literature, Jewish theatre and Jewish cultural institutions have been repressed in the U.S.S.R. Why?

To this day no public apology has been made to the families of scores of Yiddish writers liquidated in the purges of 1948-52. Such names as David Bergelson, Peretz Markish, David Hoffstein, Moshe Kulbak, Solomon Michoels, Leib Kvitko, among others assassinated by Soviet firing squads because they were Jews, are not discussed in the Soviet press; their murders never explained. Why?

Why weren't the Soviet people told what Khrushchev privately told the Canadian Communist editor, Salzman: that your old comrade and Deputy Minister of the Interior, Solomon Lozovsky, was innocently executed?

Has Lena Stern, a noted Soviet academician, been released from life imprisonment? She and Lozovsky, were among 25 Jewish writers, artists, and cultural leaders who were tried between July 11th-18th, 1952, and sentenced to death. Her sentence was commuted to life.

We had asked for an appointment to see you in order to get definitive answers to our specific questions, questions we of the Jewish Labor Committee asked some ten years ago when it became apparent that the Soviet Union had launched a wave of terror and death against Jewish culture. We had asked to meet you face-to-face and to present fact-with-fact.

We await your answer in the clear and free air of the United States.

bers of her body had perished and the features of her countenance had turned to stone. Hope was becoming ever weaker, fading, fading. Only the sound of the voice of defeat, remained — peradventure, peradventure. . .

And suddenly she became tense and strong and her head was lifted up on high. This she would not give. Nay, she would not give, come what may! And in a moment and in one great rush she raced round and round the Calf in its circuit and she turned in the heat of her storm like a whirlwind. The remnant of all that she had had she had poured forth into this god. Her only possession she had given and it had entered into it.

In a storm and a rush she danced, her feet scarce touched the earth, at one moment she was very near to the sun and then she was far from it. All pain had passed, faded, disappeared. There was no soul within her, but her chosen one alone, there was no longer her chosen one but there was her ring; there was no longer her ring but life itself; but now there was no longer life, but only God and her soul — and her chosen one and her ring and her life and God were all of a sudden, mingled and fused, and they became as one thing. And she could not distinguish between them: The soul within her had ceased to be and had entered into her chosen one, her chosen one had ceased to be and had entered into her ring, her ring had ceased to be and had entered into life, life had ceased to be and had become God.

And the dancing became stronger and stronger. The pain had entirely ceased and God alone remained. The pain had ceased to be only in her soul and had become the pain of all the multitude foregathered there, for God had taken it from her and God was the God of all the earth. And the dancing became stronger and stronger, and the storm intenser and even more intense and a great fear took hold of the people that were thereabout and they cast away each his flute and his drum and they moved away and they stood and fled for their lives.

And she still danced, without end, without purpose, without limit. Upon her lips was the white scum and her members withered, — and then suddenly she fell upon the earth. And when they lifted her up from the earth, they saw that she was dead.

This story is from the Israel Argosy.
